The Legal Profession have nothing to fear over DIY DNA tests

For over 10 years DIY DNA Paternity tests have been available to members of the public via the internet or Yellow Pages.

For years a simple telephone call or a few clicks of a computer mouse is all it took for a DNA kit to be delivered to the home next day free of charge.

The advent of selling DNA sample collection kits over the counter of chemists for approximately £30.00 can be misleading for several reasons.

These include:

- Possible misleading advice from chemists who are not fully trained in the limitations and benefits of DNA testing.
- No or limited access to post result support.
- No control regarding the actual sample collections and who has given permission. This could possibly lead to permission not being sought correctly which is unlawful in the UK
- Members of the public may be misled into thinking £30.00 is the total cost of the test, only to discover once they have opened the packet that there is another £130.00 to pay. By then it would be too late to return it.
- Members of the public may end up paying twice if they need a legal test
